

Progression in Non-Fiction Writing

Non-fiction texts are wide ranging and occur in many forms in everyday life. The following tables and supporting guidance select the most common forms of non-fiction. Many non-fiction texts in real life blur the boundaries between text types and their features. The most common language features are listed for each text type but variants of all text types occur, especially when they are used in combination. The features listed are often but not always present.

Discussion Texts

Discussion texts are not limited to controversial issues but polarised views are generally used to teach this text type as this makes it easier to teach children how to present different viewpoints and provide evidence for them. Discussions contrast with persuasion texts which generally only develop one viewpoint and may present a biased view, often the writer's own. Like all text types, discussion texts vary widely and elements of discussion writing are often found within other text types.

 The most common structure includes: a statement of the issues involved and a preview of the main arguments; arguments for, with supporting evidence/examples; arguments against or alternative views, with supporting evidence/examples. Another common structure presents the arguments 'for' and 'against' alternatively. Discussion texts usually end with a summary and a statement of recommendation or conclusion. 	 Written in the present tense. This can include other forms such as present perfect e.g. some people have arguedsome people have said Generalises the participants and things it refers to using uncountable noun phrases (some people, most dogs), nouns that categorise (vehicles, pollution) and abstract nouns (power). Heading and subheadings can be used to aid presentation. Paragraphs are useful for organising the discussion into 	e.g. Should everyone travel less to conserve global energy? The summary may develop one particular viewpoint using reasoned judgements based on the evidence provided.

Uses adverbials e.g. therefore, however to create cohesion within and across paragraphs. Writers need to make formal and informal vocabulary choices to suit the form of the writing by making generic statements followed by specific examples e.g. Most vegetarians disagree. Dave Smith, a vegetarian for 20 years, finds that ...

Layout devices such as diagrams, illustrations, moving images and sound can be used to provide additional information or give evidence

The passive voice can sometimes be used to present points of view e.g. It could be claimed that...it is possible that...some could claim that...

Degrees of formality and informality can be adapted to suit the form of the discussion e.g. whether writing a formal letter on an informal blog. This can include vocabulary choices e.g.

Don't forget that discussion texts can be combined with other text types.

Explanation Texts

Explanatory texts generally go beyond simple 'description' in that they include information about causes, motives or reasons. Explanations and reports are sometimes confused when children are asked to 'explain' and they actually provide a report, e.g. what they did (or what happened) but not how and why. Although some children's dictionaries do include an encyclopaedia-like explanation, others are inaccurately categorised as explanation texts when they simply define a word's meaning. Like all text types, explanatory texts vary widely and are often found combined with other text types.

- The steps or phases in a process are explained logically, in order. E.g. When the nights get longer ... because the temperature begins to drop ... so the hedgehog looks for a safe place to hide.
- Written in present tense e.g. Hedgehogs wake up again in the spring.)
- Questions can be used to form titles e.g. How do hedgehogs survive the winter? Why does it get dark at night?
- Question marks are used to denote questions.

- Cohesion can be created, and repetition avoided through the use of nouns and pronouns e.g. Many mammals...they feed their young...

- Decide whether you need to include images or other features to help your reader, e.g. diagrams, photographs, a flow chart, a text box, captions, a list or a glossary.
- Use the first paragraph to introduce what you will be explaining.
- Plan the steps in your explanation and check that you have included any necessary information about how and why things happen as they do.

- Re-read your explanation as if you know nothing at all about the subject. Check that there are no gaps in the information
- Remember that you can adapt explanatory texts or combine them with other text types to make them work effectively for your audience and purpose.

- Relative clauses can be used to add further information e.g. Hedgehogs, which are mammals...
- Degrees of formality and informality can be adapted to suit the form of the discussion, so an informal tone can sometimes be appropriate e.g. You'll be surprised to know that ... Have you ever thought about the way

The passive voice can sometimes be used e.g.

Layout devices such as heading, subheadings, columns, bullets etc can be used to present information clearly.

Paragraphs are useful for organising the explanation into logical sections.

Brackets, dashes and commas can be used to add extra information inside parenthesis e.g. oxygen (a gas found in air)

Instructions/procedural texts

Like all text types, variants of instructions occur and they can be combined with other text types. They may be visual only (e.g. a series of diagrams with an image for each step in the process) or a combination of words and images. Instructions and procedural texts are found in all areas of the curriculum and include rules for games, recipes, instructions for making something and directions.

Additional advice can be added through the use of parenthesis e.g. (It's a good idea to leave it overnight if you have time) Conditional adverbials can be used, including as fronted adverbials to make suggested alternatives e.g. If you would like to make a bigger decoration, you could either double the dimensions of the base or just draw bigger flowers. Modals can be used to suggest degrees of possibility e.g. you shouldyou might want to 	 Use the title to show what the instructions are about. E.g. How to look after goldfish. Work out exactly what sequence is needed to achieve the planned goal. Decide on the important points you need to include at each stage. Keep sentences as short and simple as possible. Avoid unnecessary adjectives and adverbs or technical words, especially if your readers are young. Appeal directly to the reader's interest and enthusiasm. E.g. You will really enjoy this game. Why not try out this delicious recipe on your friends? Only one more thing left to do now. Use procedural texts within other text types when you need a set of rules, guidelines or instructions to make something really clear for the reader.
	 Different degrees of formality may be required e.g. Cook for 20 minutes/Pop your cheesecake in the oven for 20 minutes. Headings can be used to separate the equipment from the procedure.

Persuasive texts

Persuasive texts can be written, oral or written to be spoken, e.g. a script for a television advert or presentation. The persuasive intention may be covert and not necessarily recognised by the reader or listener. Texts vary considerably according to context and audience so that persuasion is not always a distinct text-type that stands alone. Elements of persuasive writing are found in many different texts including moving image texts and digital multimedia texts. Some examples may include evidence of bias and opinion being subtly presented as facts.

Sentence types include rhetorical questions e.g. Do you want to get left behind in the race to be fashionable? Want to be the most relaxed person in town? So what do you have to do to? Modals can be used to suggest degrees of possibility e.g. this could be...you should...you might want to... Sometimes the second person is useful for appealing to the reader e.g. e.g. this is just what you've been looking for. This also enables adaptation of the Degrees of formality and informality so that the text appeals to the reader.

 Adjectives can be used to create persuasive noun phrases e.g. delicious chocolateevil hunters In some formal texts, it may be possible to use the passive voice e.g. It can be saidit cannot be overstated Repetition can be used to strengthen your point of view. This also acts as a cohesive device.

Reports

Non-chronological reports describe things the way they are, so they usually present information in an objective way. Sometimes, the selection of information by the writer can result in a biased report. As with all text types, variants occur and non-chronological reports can be combined with other text types. A text that is essentially a nonchronological report written in the present tense may include other text types such as other types of report, e.g. when a specific example is provided to add detail to a statement. (Sharks are often seen around the coasts of Britain but they rarely attack people. Generic Text Structure	Grammatical Features	Planning and Preparation
In the absence of a temporal (chronological) structure where events happen in a particular order, nonchronological reports usually have a logical structure. They tend to group information, often moving from general to more specific detail and examples or elaborations. A common structure includes: • an opening statement, often a general classification (Sparrows are birds); • sometimes followed by a more detailed or technical classification (Their Latin name is); • a description of whatever is the subject of the report organised in some way to help the reader make sense of the information. For example: • its qualities (Like most birds, sparrows have feathers.); • its parts and their functions (The beak is small and strong so that it can); • its habits/behaviour/ uses (Sparrows nest in)	 Often written in the third person and present tense e.g. They like to build their nests It is a cold and dangerous place to live. Sometimes written in the past tense, as in a historical report e.g. Children as young as seven worked in factories. They were poorly fed and clothed and they did dangerous work. Questions can be used to form titles e.g. Who were the Victorians? What was it like in a Victorian school? Question marks are used to denote questions. Use of conjunctions e.g. so, because Use prepositions e.g. before, after Cohesion can be created, and repetition avoided through the use of nouns and pronouns e.g. The Victorians likedthey were particularly fond of Non-chronological reports are often organised into sections. This makes paragraphing a useful tool. Headings can be used to organise different sections. Layout devices such as heading, subheadings, columns, bullets etc can be used to present 	 Plan how you will organise the information you want to include, e.g. use paragraph headings, a spidergram or a grid. Gather information from a wide range of source and collect it under the headings you've planned Consider using a question in the title to interest your reader (Vitamins – why are they so important?). Try to find a new way to approach the subject and compose an opening that will attract the reader or capture their interest. Use the opening to make very clear what you are writing about. Include tables, diagrams or images e.g. imported photographs or drawings that add or summarise information. Find ways of making links with your reader. Yo could ask a direct question e.g. Have you ever heard of a hammerhead shark? or add a personal touch to the text e.g. So next time you choose a pet, think about getting a dog. Re-read the report as if you know nothing about its subject. Check that information is logically organised and clear.

The passive voice is frequently used to avoid personalisation, to avoid naming the agent of verb, to add variety to sentences or to maint an appropriate level of formality for the containing and purpose of writing. E.g. Sparrows are for in Sharks are hunted children were taught Requires the writer to appreciate the differed between vocabulary typical of informal special and that appropriate for formal special habitat of wood mice rather than where wood mice live. Adjectives and specifically comparative adjectives can be used to create description e.g. Polar bears are the biggest carnivores of They hibernate, just like other bears. Recounts

Recounts are sometimes referred to as 'accounts'. They are the most common text type we encounter as readers and listeners, not least because they are the basic form of many storytelling texts. Stories and anecdotes can have a range of purposes, frequently depending on the genre being used, and they often set out to achieve a deliberate effect on the reader/listener. In non-fiction texts they are used to provide an account of events. Recounts can be combined with other text types, for example, newspaper reports of an event often consist of a recount that includes elements of explanation.
